TEACHER'S TALK

THE IMPORTANCE OF PLAY IN CHILDREN

For children, play is not just a way to pass time. It is the natural way they learn. It is their work, their learning, and their world. Through play, children discover new things, express their feelings, and understand how the world around them works.

When children run, jump, and climb, they are not only having fun but also developing strong bodies and healthy habits. Through play, they learn to think, imagine, and solve problems. Play is the language of children.

Play teaches important social skills. While playing together, children learn to share, take turns, cooperate, and manage their emotions.

Parents and teachers should encourage play—both indoors and outdoors. They should give children time, space, and freedom to play. Through this, we are giving them the best gift—the joy of learning through fun. In every game, there is a new lesson.

Play is not a break from learning. Play is learning. A child who plays freely learns happily. A child who plays today, learns for tomorrow.
