TEACHER'S TALK

THE FAMOUS INVENTOR THOMAS ALVA EDISON

Hemambika K

Thomas Edison was born on February 11, 1847, in Ohio, USA. As a child, he was very curious and loved asking questions. He struggled in school because his teachers thought he learned slowly. But his mother believed in him and taught him at home.

Her encouragement helped him develop a love for reading and science.

When Edison was young, he sold newspapers on trains to earn money. With the money he earned, he bought books and materials for his science experiments. He never stopped learning and experimenting. After many years of hard work, Edison invented the practical electric light bulb and improved many other useful inventions, such as the phonograph and the motion picture camera. He earned more than 1,000 patents during his lifetime. Edison is also remembered for his positive attitude toward failure. While working on the light bulb, he made thousands of unsuccessful attempts. Instead of giving up, he said, "I have not failed. I've just found 10,000 ways that won't work." His determination finally led to success. The story of Thomas Alva Edison teaches us that success comes through hard work, patience, and perseverance. We should never be afraid of failure because every mistake helps us learn and improve.

RESPECT FOR TEACHERS AND PARENTS

Today I would like to speak about " Respect for teachers and parents"

Nisha K V

Teachers and parents are two greatest guides in our life. Parents love us unconditionally. They work hard every day to provide us food, education and a happy life. They teach us good values and always want us to grow to be kind and responsible people.

Our teachers are our second parents. They share their knowledge, encourage us to do our best and help us to discover our talents. They teach us not only subjects like Mathematics, Science and English but also guide us to become honest, disciplined and respectful individuals.

Respect is shown through our actions. We can respect our parents by listening to them, helping them at home, and speaking to them politely. We can respect our teachers by paying attention in class, completing homework on time, following school rules and treating everyone with kindness.

When we respect our parents and teachers we also learn important values such as gratitude, responsibility and humility. These values help us to become better students and better human beings.

MISTAKES: THE PROOF OF LEARNING

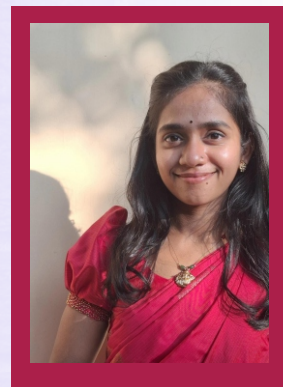

We often celebrate correct answers, but it would be great if we celebrate something that is equally important – Mistakes. Celebrating doesn't mean that we encourage the mistakes done, but making them understand that To Err is Human and that we learn from our own mistakes. All are not born knowing everything. We learn by exploring, asking questions, referring answers, trying new things and yes, by making mistakes. Every mistake is a step towards understanding. When a child writes a letter incorrectly, miscounts numbers, or struggles to complete a task, it is not a sign of failure. It is a sign that learning is taking place. It's the same in grown ups too. In a workplace or school or anywhere, our role is not to expect perfection always in everyone, but to create a safe and encouraging environment where the person with the task feels confident to try again. When we respond to mistakes with patience and guidance instead of criticism, we help them to develop confidence, resilience, and a love to try again by learning from mistakes. As the saying goes, "Mistakes are proof that you are trying", every correction brings a man one step closer to success. Let us even encourage our children to ask questions, explore without fear, and understand that mistakes are opportunities to grow. Hence we can create an awareness where children are not afraid to make mistakes but are inspired to learn from them instead of making the same mistake multiple times.

I WANT TO START BY SHARING A SMALL MEMORY OF MINE

When I was a kid, whenever I saw a balloon seller, my eyes went straight to the balloons. The red ones, the blue ones, the big smiley faces floating in the air. I would tug on my mother's hand and say, "I want that one." My whole world was those balloons.

Now, when I see a balloon seller, my eyes go to the person first. The old man standing in the sun. The tired hands holding the strings. The sweat on his forehead.

The balloons are still there, but now I see the story behind them.

Aiswarya T R

That's what growing up is.

When we are small, we look at things. As we grow, we start looking at people. We start noticing their effort. We start understanding that behind every small joy, there is someone's hard work.

Think about your own life.

The tiffin box you open at lunch — someone woke up early to cook it.

The uniform you wear — someone ironed it, someone earned the money to buy it.

The classroom you sit in — someone cleans it before you come, someone built the benches you use.

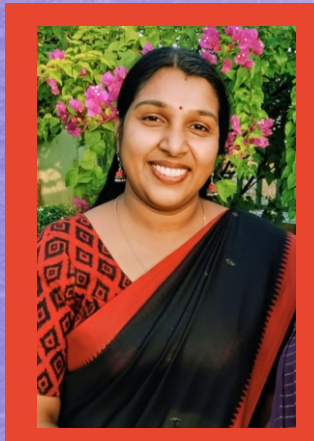

This is what we call responsibility. It's not a big, scary word. It simply means "seeing." Seeing the people behind your comfort. And once you see them, you naturally want to do your part. You keep your class clean. You finish your homework on time. You say thank you. Definitely, you respect your teachers. And your friends too. That's maturity.

But in this race of growing up, winning means nothing if you arrive with an empty smile.

Like a rank card with a heavy heart is still a loss.

Hold your duties in one hand, and your happiness in the other.

That's how you truly win.

THE JOURNEY OF PERSEVERANCE

Balendu V

Today, I would like to share a lesson from The Odyssey, one of the world's greatest epics.

The hero, Odysseus, faced many storms, dangers, and obstacles on his long journey home. There were times when it would have been easier to give up, but he never lost hope. With courage, patience, and wisdom, he kept moving forward until he reached his destination.

Our lives are also like a journey. We may face difficult lessons, challenging exams, or moments when we feel discouraged. But every challenge teaches us something valuable and makes us stronger.

Remember, success is not about never facing difficulties. It is about having the courage to keep going, one step at a time.

As Odysseus teaches us, the journey may be long, but perseverance always leads us home.
